The Galena High School Marching Band put a little Aloha into their step as they performed at the 75th anniversary celebration of Pearl Harbor in early December. Representing the State of Nevada, they marched in the Pearl Harbor Memorial Parade, played with American and Japanese marching bands in the Tribute Performance at the USS Missouri, and met World War II veterans.

55 band members made the fourday trip to Hawaii with band director Kevin Sady.

"I like to give students an opportunity to travel," Sady said. "Some of them might never get this opportunity otherwise."

The Galena High School Grizzly Marching Band participated in the Pearl Harbor Memorial Parade lead by band director Kevin Sady. Together with five ROTC students they honored veterans as part of the 75th anniversary celebration of Pearl Harbor.

A big fundraising effort had made the trip a reality. To help pay for plane tickets, hotel rooms, and baggage fees for the instruments, students raised money with donation-based concerts and a door-to-door campaign in the Galena community. Together with their parents, they worked concession stands at several Reno Aces baseball games and created a website to collect donations, according to chaperone Tina Montella. They also found corporate sponsors and received a generous gift from the Washoe County Commission and Commissioner Bob Lucey.

Leading up to the trip, band members had to practice intensely every day. They dedicated the last two weeks prior to departure to marching in parade formation and memorizing music. Commitment and preparation paid off. "This trip was a big, once-in-a-

Welcome to winter! For all of you involved in local "Pray for Snow" parties, thank you! It seems to be working. It's always nice to get some early snow to generate excitement for a great winter sport season. A lot of ski resorts already have lifts open and a decent snow base, and if the forecast is accurate, it will only get better.

The Galena Times strives to be a positive and informative resource for our local community. Every issue features unique stories specific to our region, from recreation, health, and business, to history, food, and entertainment. It's always exciting for me to open up a new issue and see what's happening around me.

As the Galena Times wraps up another busy year, we'd like to thank all of our writers, readers, and advertisers for their enthusiasm and support of our local community newspaper. We couldn't do this without you, and your involvement helps to spread our community spirit.

LIDAR Technology assists with reconstruction of V&T Railroad Tunnel

Janice Keillor

It's cool to see in 3-D. My previous exposure to 3-D has mostly been in movies, but as 3-D technology improves, so do its uses which now include 3-D printing, photography, and scanning. One 3-D technology that is increasing in popularity is LIDAR. Also called 3D scanning or "light detection and ranging", LIDAR is a surveying method that measures the distance to a target by illuminating the target with a laser light. The result is a very precise, high resolution image.

Locally, LIDAR was used for the reconstruction of the Virginia and Truckee railroad. When NDOT and the BLM needed help re-opening the collapsed American Flat tunnel between Gold Hill and Moundhouse, they used a ground-based LIDAR scanner to document existing conditions. The tunnel was a shambles, having been damaged by fire multiple times, abandoned in 1941, and then purposely collapsed with dynamite in 1969 after it had been deemed a public hazard.

At the time of investigation, the tunnel was in an unknown condition and potentially unsafe for crews to enter. But in order for the V & T railroad line to be revived, the American Flat tunnel had to be re-opened. There was literally no way around it. It was a crucial yet difficult task, and LIDAR technology was an important tool to completing the job.

LIDAR works by using rotating mirrors to take millions of measurements, creating a point cloud. A simple way to think of a point cloud is as a collection of multiple points that are brought together into a single feature. When enough points are brought together, they start to show some new qualities not usually seen with your standard photograph. It's kind of like a modern, 3-D version of a Georges Seurat painting.

When the tunnel restoration project began, timbers were found piled up by the entrance. Using a ground-based Leica C10 LIDAR scanner, the tunnel was scanned from the east and west portals to determine the condition it was in. The point cloud created showed the inner structure and was much more detailed than any image taken with a camera. It turned out that only the ends of the tunnel had been closed and the majority of the interior was still intact.

LIDAR images helped the crew to determine the extent of the LiDAR's high resolution and accuracy can assist in road, building and vegetation mapping. The 3D aspect of LiDAR makes it especially suitable for mapping terrain models, including the collapsed American Flat tunnel near Carson City.

reconstruction and to create a plan of attack. The work was difficult and costly, but the tunnel was completed in 2008, and the tourist line has been up and running since 2009.

As 3-D technology continues to advance, the uses for LIDAR seem to be endless. Self-driving cars use highresolution 3-D LIDAR maps in order to navigate in the dark. Forest fire managers employ LIDAR to monitor the possible fire areas. In planning park and tourism areas, LIDAR can aid finding the best spot to have a playground and walking trail. Archeologists use LIDAR to detect micro topography that is hidden by vegetation. Law enforcement use ground-based LIDAR to capture an accident and crime scene. Geologists utilize LIDAR to find faults and measure uplift. In the exploration of Mars, LIDAR created a topographic map of the red planet. And in the study of tsunamis, LIDAR technology can help scientists understand the area that will be covered when a tsunami occurs.

LIDAR is a fascinating technology that will continue to improve and benefit our society. I only wish I could put on my old 3-D glasses and see in "LIDAR".

School. "It was special to go with the band and be with the veterans; their war stories are very interesting."

Steve Cohen, one of five chaperones who accompanied the band, five ROTC students with Command Sergeant Major Suzanne Albin and assistant principal Teresa Burrows, said the students realized the historical significance of their trip.

"We came full circle with the kids," he said. "We saw at Pearl Harbor Memorial the beginning of America's entrance into World War II and on the USS Missouri we saw the spot where Japan surrendered."

The group also watched a documentary and visited the USS Arizona Memorial where 1,102 of the 1,177 sailors and Marines killed on the ship are still buried 75 years after the attack. The night before the Pearl Harbor attacks, bands from each ship held a band competition. A few hours later, many of the band members were dead, and their names are etched on the memorial.

"It was a very emotional and educational time for the students," Cohen said.

Aside from somber lessons in history, the students also spend half a day exploring the rich heritage of the Pacific Islands. Wandering through 42 acres of tropical splendor at the Polynesian Cultural Village, they enjoyed the adventure of traditional hands-on activities from six Pacific cultures. The band's trip to Oahu also included a hike through drizzling rain to the volcano Diamond Head and an afternoon at the beach without which a trip to Hawaii would not have been complete.

Snowshoes get kids to appreciate winter

By Sue Jacox

What is snow science? How can we stay safe in the snow? How are some animals adapted to even the harshest winters?

In the SnowSchool outdoor classroom of Galena Creek and Mt. Rose, students get to explore these questions on snowshoes. Great Basin Outdoor School and the Galena Creek Visitor Center team up to share the hands-on lessons with local 4th-8th graders. Classes meet at the Galena Creek Visitor Center where students learn about the Sierra snowpack as the source of our water, winter safety, winter adaptations, and Leave No Trace principles. After some activities at the Visitor Center, students re-board their school bus to go eight miles higher up the Mt. Rose Highway for the perfect snowshoe destination. The program runs weekdays 10am-1pm, January 30-February 10. Snowshoes and warm clothing can be borrowed free of charge.

Winter Break Day Camp at River School--For parents seeking active educational opportunities for children during winter break, kids will snowshoe, learn about local wildlife, and do hands-on science during Great Basin Outdoor School's Winter Break Day Camp, January 2-6. It will be held at the River School Farm in Reno near Patagonia from 9am-4pm daily with an option for before and after care. Children will fill their days exploring and learning with visits from local scientists and natural resource professionals. Children in grades 1-6 are welcome.

Overnight Winter Science Camp at Tahoe--For a more in-depth winter curriculum plus astronomy, teachers may bring classes to winter overnight science camp in cozy heated cabins at Lake Tahoe.

The last available session is February 21-22. Students will track Tahoe wildlife on snowshoes on Day 2.

Programs provide students with a safe and fun environment in which to study winter ecology. Through education about the natural ecosystems of our region, students gain an understanding of our environment and their responsibility to pursue outdoor winter activities in a safe and respectful manner.

Parents may register children for Winter Break Day Camp and teachers may register classes for SnowSchool and Winter Science Camp at Tahoe by contacting Leilani Konyshev at Great Basin Outdoor School at (775) 324-0936 or education@greatbasin-os.org. For more info, visit www.greatbasin-os.org.

Winter fun and scenic solitude around Washoe Lake

By Dan Fleischman

During the winter months, I frequently travel to Washoe Lake. The hills on the east and south side of the lake offer easy access and solitude for winter hiking. Numerous dirt roads venture up into these hills and most of them are within federal lands, so you won't have to be concerned about angry, private landowners.

There are plenty of places to hike around Washoe Lake. Many people are aware of Jumbo Grade Way on the east side of East Lake Blvd across from New Washoe City. This road leads into the hills, and actually crosses the Virginia Range, going all the way to Virginia City. However, there are other hiking areas on the east side of Washoe Lake. Right across from the entrance to Little Washoe Lake, a dirt road leads to round-topped Pt. 6023. You can also access federal lands from Skinner Drive, East Guffrey Drive, and Cottontail Lane. All three are access points to Cottontail Mountain (6,073').

Perhaps the best trail system in this area is located south of Washoe Lake, where two trailheads offer excellent access to two conical mountains: Nine Hill (6,077') and Peak 6105.

First, there is a Ranger station

situated at the southeast corner of the Washoe Valley. From Reno, take Old 395 to East Lake Blvd. Head south on East Lake Blvd for about 7 miles where the road turns sharply west. At this corner is the Ranger Station. If coming from the south, the Ranger Station is about three and a half miles from the East Lake Blvd exit of the 580 freeway.

Another trailhead is located threequarters of a mile to the west of the Ranger Station. There is a trail sign and space for only a few cars.

Both starting points lead up to the same place: an old dirt road weaving between the hills. Regardless of where you start, you will reach the base of the two peaks in a little less than one and a half miles. Nine Hill and Peak 6105 share a saddle, and each towers above its respective side. Nine Hill is over 300' above the saddle, and Peak 6105 is about 340' above the saddle. Hiking either is a lung-busting, calf-busting endeavor. But the views are worth the effort.

You can also reach these peaks from Goni Road in North Carson City. That is fairly straight-forward, since Goni Road runs right by the road to the saddle. The turn-off for the saddle road is less than three miles up Goni Road from Arrowhead Drive.

You can explore several other summits within this area, including Duck Hill (5,875') and Sugarloaf (5,933') which hosts an electric tower. When my friends and I explored this area on January 1, 2016 we were walking on heavy snow and still managed to reach six summits that day.

I recommend hiking these hills in less snowy conditions, and on days when it isn't too windy. But regardless, this is an excellent winter destination that is close to home.

Whites Creek trails get a facelift

By Jerry Keir

The Nevada Conservation Corps improved mountain biking conditions in the Galena area this fall by supporting the US Forest Service's efforts toward realizing a sustainable network of trails. NCC crews worked along Whites Creek, widening a significant portion of the trail that washed out along a steep and perilous section. As a federally-funded AmeriCorps program, the NCC serves public lands through deploying trail, forestry, and restoration crews throughout the state. In addition to constructing and maintaining local trails, volunteers also thin forests to reduce fuels at a time when woodlands are at risk of catastrophic wildfire. Other statewide projects include treating public lands for exotic species at a time when

What's the big deal about Gliders?

By David Ravetti

I used to live in Reno. Wish I still did. Why you ask? Well, I'm a glider pilot and I fly sailplanes, those gliders with long and slender wings, which ride the air currents not unlike a sail boat using the wind to go places.

So what's that have to do with Reno? Just so happens that some of the best soaring conditions in the world for sailplanes is right here around Reno. Reno is in the middle of a big triangle of three world renowned glider ports. Most know of Minden to the south, maybe Truckee to the west and just to the north is Air Sailing. All provide everything a student through the most experienced of glider pilots could ask for. And they're all within an hour drive of Reno.

So what's it like to soar with birds? And yes, it's not uncommon to fly in circles with hawks and eagles in warm rising air. These columns of warm rising air are called thermals. Glider pilots use them to gain altitude which they can then use to travel great distances. An example would be my last flight out of Truckee. Returning back from Mono Lake, I climbed to almost 17,000' over the southern side of Heavenly Valley and then glided right over the middle of Lake Tahoe back to Truckee. Spectacular to say the least! But that's not the point of this article. It's something better!

Back in 1970, I was a young kid in high school. An average "C" grade student. No ambition per se, but I did like making and flying model airplanes. By happen stance I was offered my first lesson in a glider. And by the way, did you know you can solo a glider at age 14? Two years sooner than powered aircraft. Anyway, I was enthralled! I became focused on learning to fly gliders. I focused on earning money (you want fries with that) to pay for lessons. By the time my senior year started, I had soloed, and by the time I finished college, I was a commercial pilot and flight instructor. I've amassed over 20,000 hours in the last 45 years, the best hours being in gliders.

It was those glider lessons in high school that gave me purpose and promise. I didn't realize it at the time because it was just so fun flying gliders and soaring with the birds. My parents supported my endeavor. I In Galena, the NCC successfully completed a short trail reroute along a stream crossing, heavily benching in the trail, using boulders to stabilize the outslope while also decommissioning older, unstable stream crossing points.

They maintained approximately 2 miles of trail. These upgrades improve the quality and safety of the recreationist experience in the Galena area.

The NCC is supported by the State of Nevada's Recreational Trails Program and AmeriCorps' Nevada Volunteers.

Jerry Keir is executive director of the Great Basin Institute. The Great Basin Institute is an interdisciplinary field studies organization that promotes environmental research, education, and conservation throughout the West.

could never thank them enough when I got older. So if you have a teen looking for purpose in life, take them out for a glider lesson. Don't tell them about how it will improve their life. Just tell 'em it's fun and leave it at that!

David Ravetti has flown anything from gliders to jets over his career and spends most of his free time soaring over the Eastern Sierras. He and his wife Linda, also a pilot, enjoy summers camping and soaring at the glider port on the Truckee Airport with Silverado Soaring Club (Silveradosoaring.org), a non-profit organization.

Can teenagers learn grace and courtesy?

Nevada Junior Cotillion teaches teens ballroom dance to instill confidence and social grace. Courtesy and respect are soft skills rarely taught in schools, but practiced at Junior Cotillion.

Submitted to Galena Times

What parent wouldn't want their child to get a competitive edge heading into adulthood? Certainly that soccer goal last weekend was impressive and a stellar report card doesn't hurt—but is that enough these days? The simple answer is 'No'.

Unfortunately, social graces, otherwise known as "soft skills", are rarely taught in school anymore. As your adolescents head into the brave new world, they're going to need them for important things like school dances, dating and the all-important job interview.

Do they know how to make a proper handshake, feel comfortable making introductions, or know which fork to use at a restaurant? Junior Cotillion helps teach this material to kids in a fun way. And you can bet that your child's participation in Cotillion may just be the difference in getting that perfect job, or just feeling comfortable in all things social. Nice manners mean that you are pleasant to be around and liked by all.

You might be saying, "Great sales pitch, but this program seems stuffy and my child will never like it." Don't be fooled, the secret behind Nevada Junior Cotillion's unique program is that these classes are fun. Learning to ballroom dance instills unbelievable confidence in a child making them want to come back for more. By the final dance, the students discover all of what they've learned is actually fun and exciting because now they're comfortable with their social skills.

Major excitement occurs when each child gets to show off at the 50s Sock Hop or Masquerade Ball. Because it's so much fun, many students easily repeat the class or move to the next level. Nevada Junior Cotillion's Facebook page or YouTube Channel feature dance videos from last year in which 100 children demonstrate how much fun they are having. Another course begins in February and it just might be the most important program your soon-to-be adult will ever take.

Nevada Junior Cotillion is a 6-class program for $150, held at the California Building in Idlewild Park on Friday nights from February 3rd to March 10th. Level 1 (Informal) is for 5th&6th graders at 5.45 PM, and Level 2 (Semi-Formal) is for 7th- 8th graders at 7 PM. No prior dance experience is required but dress code is required (see website for details). To register your child, click "Registration" at NevadaJuniorCotillion.com. For further inquiries, email NevadaJuniorCotillion@gmail.com or call (775) 622-8550. Sign up early, space is limited.

Galena celebrates inaugural high school mountain bike season before returning to the dirt in the spring.

By Paul Miers

The Galena Mountain Bike Team, composed of area athletes grades 6-12, wrapped up its first season competing in the interscholastic Nevada League. The league consisted of 13 teams from Truckee, North Tahoe, Reno-Sparks, Carson City, Minden and Mammoth Lakes. Over 200 athletes competed.

Galena High School had over 35 kids committed to the team. They participated in weekly practices and challenged themselves in the four league races. Many of the students also competed in other fall sports in addition to mountain biking.

Races were contested starting late August at North Tahoe High School, followed by competitions at Hidden Valley Regional Park, Mammoth Mountain and the league championship October 23 at Tahoe Donner. The Galena team tied North Tahoe for the overall league championship with the tie breaker going to North Tahoe.

Great results for the first season. Riders cannot wait for the next Nevada League season that starts next July. In the meantime, they will all take a break from riding to enjoy some winter sports before returning to the dirt in the spring. For additional mountain biking opportunity, Reno Tahoe Junior Cycling is excited to start its sixth season of spring-summer mountain bike racing. The race development team is called RENO DEVO. Athletes ages 10 to 18 are introduced to the science of cycling and coached to develop their skills on the mountain bike. Athletes use structured training plans, delivered to them weekly, to develop their cycling fitness. Under the instruction of USA Cycling licensed coaches, athletes meet 2 to 3 times per week for training sessions while training on their own several other days each week. The team has grown from 8 athletes in the beginning to over 30 for the upcoming season.

Coaches Kyle Dixon and Paul Miers recently attended a 4-day national coaching summit at the USA Cycling headquarters in Colorado Springs, with one day devoted to youth cycling. The collaboration with other successful junior teams was an invaluable experience.

Signups for the RenoDevo season are already under way.

For more information on either team please visit galenamtb.org or renotahoejuniorcycling.com or contact Paul Miers at p.miers@yahoo.com.

Do school dress codes offer unity and identity?

By Noelle Kim

The implementation of school uniforms has become a worldwide phenomenon within the past few decades in both private and public educational institutions. Many educators view uniforms as an effective form of social control that promotes increased academic excellence, focus, and inclusion within the student body. Despite the many benefits of donning uniforms, at Sage Ridge School students have mixed opinions regarding the effectiveness of this policy. They are required to wear khaki bottoms with collared polo shirts in maroon or black four days a week. Dress Wednesdays mandate khaki bottoms, dress shirts and blazers.

Vivian Tao, a senior at Sage Ridge School who has been attending since sixth grade, believes uniform policies provides students with many benefits.

"Wearing uniforms minimizes possible sources of bullying," Tao said. "Many students' clothing reflects their culture or certain personality traits that may become easy targets for defamation."

She asserts that uniforms minimize distraction and allow students to save time that would have been otherwise devoted to selecting an outfit in the morning. Although some believe uniforms lead to a loss of personal expression, Tao uses her creativity in the way she accessorizes.

"Sage Ridge allows students to freely choose their accessories so students can showcase their personal style while still limiting other social issues caused by not having a uniform," Tao said.

She feels that uniforms have allowed her life to be easier and freer of social stress.

In contrast, Jasmine Brazelton, a junior who has been attending since seventh grade, stands in firm opposition to the school's uniform policy.

"Uniforms enforce a culture of conformity and suppress students' individualism in a place where they spend most of their day," Brazelton said. She believes that people use their clothes to communicate their personality. Uniforms strip that method of self-expression.

"I see no difference in the quality of my education or academic performance from wearing a school uniform," she said. "If students are distracted by someone's outfit, the problem extends beyond clothing."

She further claims that there is enough variation in school uniforms that students still find ways to judge others. Although Brazelton appreciates the time she saves in the morning from wearing a uniform, she feels like a part of her personality is gone when she wears prescribed outfits.

John Sloyan, an upper school English teacher at Sage Ridge School, admits there is a time and place for unhindered self-expression, but he prefers the current uniform system.

"It's good to give students as much choice as possible," he said. "But a little hindrance is not a bad thing."

Every child can be successful in math

Submitted to Galena Times

Some kids struggle in math and need to catch up. Others simply want to keep up. And then there are some who want to get ahead. Regardless of where on the spectrum a student might fall, Mathnasium in South Reno offers instruction to elementary, middle and high school students who fit into any of the three categories.

"Our goal is to help children develop confidence, understanding and a lifelong love of math," said Neetha Govind, center director of Mathnasium.

A comprehensive assessment identifies a student's knowledge gaps. Based on the results, a personalized learning program is developed, which is unique for each child's needs.

"If a student has fallen behind, we work to fill in those educational gaps," Govind said.

Since math concepts build upon one another, it is important to have a strong foundation.

"We feel math skills are essential in life and everyone can do math," Govind added. "Because of this, our approach goes beyond tutoring for the next test. We want to teach students to do more than follow a mathematical process, we want them to understand the concepts supporting the process so that math becomes a tool they can use in any aspect of life."

Mathnasium also provides customized test prep services for SAT and ACT exams.

Mathnasium is located at 734 South

Mathnasium teachers help students who want to catch up or get ahead in math.

Gluten free diets have recently been all the rage. Professional in hopes of better performance.

Soccer moms are hoping to lose a few pounds. But what does the science say about gluten?

Health, Sports & Fitness 15

Gluten is a protein found in wheat, barley, spelt, kamut and rye. Its appeal is that it is an organic type of glue holding baked products together and improving their texture. Without gluten, baked products would crumble very easily. Although it is a protein, gluten has a low biological and nutritional value. Aside from baked goods, gluten is found in many processed food products and is hidden (not labeled) in foods, a number of recognized medical disorders are related to gluten. These include celiac disease, nonceliac gluten sensitivity, wheat allergy, gluten ataxia and dermatitis herpetiformis.

Although gluten seems just a small component in

Celiac disease is a serious disease caused by an immune reaction to gluten. Although the immune response is initiated in the gut, the response spreads throughout the whole body. Most cases of celiac disease are never recognized. It is estimated that 1% of the population has celiac disease. Furthermore, that 1% only represents the most severe manifestation of celiac disease. For every one person with severe celiac disease there are 99 with milder versions of the same disease. Even those with weaker forms of the disease are much more likely to die early as a result of consuming gluten. Symptoms involve the digestive system, as well as impaired growth, shorter lifespan, osteoporosis, symptoms can be so diverse that doctors have great difficulty in diagnosing the cause. Which is why the vast majority of these people go unrecognized.

Gluten-sensitive individuals may harbor high levels of a molecule called zonulin that is linked to inflammation. Zonulin is produced in the gut when humans are exposed to gluten, gliadin (the other protein found in wheat) or cholera toxin. Yes, cholera toxin. The effect of gluten on the intestinal lining is the same as cholera.

Zonulin opens up the spaces between the cells of the intestinal lining. This makes the intestines permeable to nasty feces in the gut. Without the intestinal cells filtering out the bad stuff, it goes directly into the bloodstream. The liver may not be able to detoxify the blood which then is circulated throughout the body.

Curling – An Olympic sport we all can play

By Paul Andrew Every four years during the Winter Olympics, between in downhill skiing, hockey luge, and slopestyle snowboarding, viewers are exposed to the unusual sport of curling. Compared to traveling eighty miles an hour down a sheet of packed snow, or being smashed into the boards by a Czechoslovakian, it seems like an analytical a precision sport. Soon, the network switches to ice dancing, and curling is easily forgotten.

Now, thanks to two brothers in South Lake Tahoe, curling is catching on in our area, and can be played by anybody. Larry and Ray Sidney of Zephyr Cove, recently started a curling league at the South Lake Tahoe Ice Arena, so there are opportunities for anyone interested in trying the sport to see how it works.

to-curling evening in 2010, and was hooked," Larry Sidney said. "When I moved to Tahoe in 2012, I jumped on board. We then founded Lake Tahoe Epic Curling (LTEC) in January 2013."

Curling was founded much earlier, namely in medieval Scotland back in 1541 with rolling rocks sliding at targets across the ice. Apparently, there wasn't a lot of entertainment during the frozen winters in the hinterland.

Curling today is a lot like shuffleboard on ice. The curling stone, complete with a curved handle on top for grabbing, weighs between 38 and 44 pounds. The object is to get your "stones" closest to the "house", a target painted 120 feet down the ice. The curler roller slides the stone, while his teammate sweepers slick the ice in front of the projective to help it get closest to the center. The skip standing behind the target, instructs the sweepers whether to sweep or not.

"We would like to grow to the point where we have several leagues going on several different days of the week," Sidney said. "Also, as our club grows, we would like to offer youth curling programs."

Since I am decades past thinking I could compete in the men's slalom, or be the runner in the bobsled, I thought I'd give it a try. It really is fun, very technical in how one slides the rock down the ice, and sweeping in front of the moving projectile is a workout. After learning the techniques, we divided into teams, then the competitive juices started to flow. Though I know curling isn't my Olympic calling, we did shut the other team out, so I can claim to be undefeated in my curling career.

Paul Andrew is a long-time resident of Zephyr Cove. For information on Lake Tahoe Epic Curling, contact the Sidney Brothers at www.laketahoecurling.com, or e-mail info@tahoecurling.com.

CranioSacral Therapy can help heal concussions

By Kerstin Tracy I take head injuries and concussions verv seriously. Having worked with clients who a long time ago had head injuries or concussions and still suffer from related problems, I cannot emphasize enough the importance of injury prevention and right treatment such as CranioSacral Therapy.

Winter means skiing, skating, or snowboarding and these activities bring great joy, but they also increase the risk of falls and collisions. Concussions, meaning the head hitting an object or an object hitting the head with or without a whiplash injury, can lead to cumulative symptoms over time. Depending on the forces put on the head, vascular bleedings can occur as well as damages to the neurons and glia cells, tissues that support the brain.

PCS, or post-concussion syndrome, describes the unresolved, chronic continuation of a group of physical, emotional and mental symptoms. Symptoms of PCS include headaches, dizziness, fatigue, irritability, insomnia, altered endocrine function and concentration or memory difficulty for more than three weeks after the injury, according to the World Health Organization.

These symptoms can occur for years after the injury. It is estimated that 7-33% of those diagnosed with concussion suffer from PCS. They can find a path to healing through CranioSacral Therapy, a manual technique capable of accessing and addressing the vascular, structural and neurological tissues in the brain. CranioSacral Therapy is a gentle and very precise, hands-on healing modality with its origin in osteopathy.

The craniosacral system is the deepest layer of the fascial system, a continuous network of tissue that surrounds every structure of the body. It refers to three layers of membranes that cover the brain and spinal cord. The membranes are attached to the entire skull, the opening at the bottom of the skull, the first vertebrae and the first sacral vertebra. One of the layers covers the spinal nerves as well.

These anatomical attachments help point out the important role of the fascia in head injuries and show why CranioSacral Therapy has such a far reaching effect. It is never too late to support the body in healing head injuries and it is never too early. Children greatly benefit from this modality as well. Their growing and very sensitive tissues do not recover as fast as previously assumed.

Kerstin S. Tracy holds a Master's Degree in Sports Science and is an advanced practitioner in Upledger CranioSacral Therapy and Equine Craniosacral Bodywork as well as a Master Certified Holistic Manifestation Method Coach. To find out more about CranioSacral Therapy in general or if you have had head injuries or know anyone who did, visit www. ready2heal.net or email with any questions.

Why vaccinating your child is important

By Max Coppes As a parent of three, now adult children, know I we parents want to do what is best for our children. That includes asking questions, against the grain.

The decision whether or not to vaccinate (or immunize) children for some of the most common vaccine preventable diseases used to be a no brainer for most parents; it certainly was for us. More recently, however, we find that parents are asking questions before providing consent. I welcome this development; it certainly shows how serious parents take their responsibilities.

Being a parent is a privilege. But with this privilege come some serious obligations: to care, support, nurture, and mentor fellow human beings. No wonder parenting often turns out so much more difficult than it looked like before having children.

Most parents provide consent, some give permission but still challenge the recommendations, and some decide to go against the grain. To be clear, all parents want to do what is best for their children. But do they when they refuse vaccinations?

Some believe in the notion that voluntary exposure to an infectious agent could benefit a person by stimulating his/her immune system. The idea is over a thousand years old and goes back to China and India. It wasn't introduced in Europe and America until the mid-1700s. Initially, healthy people were exposed to agents capable of infecting them, carrying a very real risk that they would actually develop the full-blown disease rather than a milder form that might help build immunity against it.

In the 19th century, Louis Pasteur led the way in developing techniques that resulted in vaccines that lost the ability to infect. This important development revolutionized our capability to develop immunity to several serious infections that used to kill thousands and cause serious complications in even greater numbers. As a result of the advances made over the past decades, children neither have to get measles, mumps, rubella, hepatitis, polio, tetanus, or diphtheria, nor suffer from the sometimes serious consequences these infections carry, including death.

Before the measles vaccine was introduced in 1963, 500 Americans died annually of this viral infection.

It actually is therefore true that vaccinations save lives. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, vaccines given to infants and young children over the past two decades will prevent 322 million illnesses, 21 million hospitalizations and 732,000 deaths over the course of their lifetimes.

Some parents express concerns including real and debunked side effects. There is no question that vaccinations result in side effects in some children. Common side effects (about one in four) include pain, redness, and tenderness at the injection site, and flue like symptoms. Very rarely serious side effects occur: allergic reaction (or anaphylaxis), seizures, high fever, joint pain or stiffness, pneumonia. However, it is not true that the Measles, Mumps, Rubella or MMR vaccine causes autism as initially reported in 1998. The physician responsible for the fraudulent article that suggested such link, Dr. Andrew Wakefield, lost his medical license in the UK for having falsified data.

I encourage every parent to discuss openly any concerns you may have about vaccinating your child; that is your job. In some rare cases (allergies, defective immune system) vaccinations may not be on your child's best interest. But as you do think about this, you may wonder why I know of no pediatrician in Reno who has skipped one single vaccine for their own children. If it is the best for their children, would it not be the best for yours?

Carson Tahoe Cancer Center celebrates 10 years of caring, healing, and improving

Submitted to Galena Times

It began as a vision. An idea of how Carson Tahoe could change the way our community thinks about cancer care. Understanding the importance of having treatment, intervention, support, and after-care – all under one roof – Carson Tahoe Regional Healthcare Foundation embarked on an ambitious capital campaign to raise funds for a state-of-the-art Cancer Center.

In November 2006, the dream became reality and Northern Nevada's first freestanding, comprehensive cancer center opened to patients and the community. Also, the acclaimed Cancer Resource Center – previously located in the historic Adams House – re-opened within the new Cancer Center, providing much needed resources and support to local cancer patients. In the following years many more accomplishments would be realized:

The Merriner Cottages opened just a month after the Cancer Center, thanks to a generous $2 million donation from the Merriner Family Trust. These cozy bungalows provide temporary housing for those who travel a significant distance or have transportation difficulties, which would otherwise impair their ability to receive treatment.

From the moment Carson Tahoe opened its doors, staff and administrators have worked hard to redefine healthcare excellence in Northern Nevada. The 35,000-square-foot facility includes full-time medical and radiation oncology practices, an ambulatory infusion center with stunning views of the Eagle Valley, and extensive support services.

For those who need additional healing and medical support, Carson Tahoe Regional Medical Center is right on campus with a broad safety net of critical care services.

From diagnosis to treatment to recovery, Carson Tahoe Cancer Center has been here for the community every step of the way throughout its 10-year evolution.

CARSON TAHOE CANCER CENTER MILESTONES

2007 – Cancer Center received recognition for "Outstanding Achievement" by the Commission on Cancer.

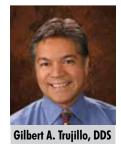

2009 – Over 100,000 patient visits.

2013 – Cancer Center became the first in Nevada to receive gold level accreditation by the American College of Surgeons' Commission on Cancer.

2015 – Affiliation with one of the top academic cancer research institutions in the country, Huntsman Cancer Institute at the University of Utah.

Teens and bad breath

Construction Rate-Lock offered by U.S. Bank Home Mortgage

By Gilbert Trujillo Although bad breath can strike at any age, it is often more noticeable in teenagers. Most of the time, a lack of oral hygiene is the root of the problem, however, there can be other causes as well. Many think that mouth rinses and gum will take away bad breath. But most of the time those products will just mask the odor and often it will return within minutes. So what can be done?

First, it is important to find the primary cause of bad breath. Millions of bacteria live in the mouth, particularly on the back of the tongue which is an ideal place for bacteria to grow due to its moist environment. The best way to rid your teen's bad breath is to have them brush and floss regularly. Yes, that means twice daily, two minutes each time, with a fluoridate toothpaste followed by flossing once daily. Also, brushing the tongue with a toothbrush or using an instrument like a tongue scraper can be essential in ridding the unpleasant odor.

If you notice your teen has bad breath in the morning, rest assure this is fairly normal and not usually a health concern. But regular checkups and cleanings are instrumental in keeping the mouth clean which in turn reduces bad breath. If your teen is diligent about his or her homecare and is seeing the dentist on their recommended intervals, you may need to look into other causes.

These causes include, but are not limited to infections in the mouth, respiratory tract infections, or external agents such as garlic, onions, coffee, chewing tobacco and cigarette smoking. Other reasons might be dry mouth caused by salivary gland problems, mouth breathing due to allergies or other conditions or medications that dry the mouth. # Hellebores bring color into late winter garden blues

By Mary Sattler

Hellebores, commonly referred to as the Christmas Rose and the Lenten Rose, are neither roses nor are they even closely related to the rose family. But at a time of year when nothing else is blooming, hellebores provide a splash of colors ranging from white, cream, green, pink, red, purple to even black. These evergreen flowers bloom in late winter, heralding the coming of spring with lovely, nodding, cup-shaped flowers.

Hellebores are a member of the Ranunculaceae family and while their blooms can be quite lovely, they miss the fragrance factor associated with roses. However, they couple spectacular colors with a mounding greengrey to dark green foliage and handsome leather-like, pedate-shaped leaves. Mass plantings of hellebores work well as a ground cover, in beds, as borders and as container plantings. Often profuse blooms last between 6 to 8 weeks.

Since they are propagated from seed strains, each flower is unique and all exhibit slight variations. Hellebores are perfect flowering plants for Northern Nevada because they tolerate a wide range of soil and pH conditions and are rated cold hardy for zones 5-8. When they are blooming, diseases and pests are not usually an issue and while they do like shade, they will tolerate morning sun usually until 11am to 12pm. Best of all, Hellebores are deer and rabbit resistant. The only disadvantage is, they are poisonous to people and pets.

winter. Hellebore niger got its common name from an old legend that mentions it sprouted in the snow as a result of a young girls tears because she had no gift for the Christ child in Bethlehem.

Modern cultivars exhibit larger flowers, pink flowered and double-flowered selections. The Skagit Gardens Gold collection includes Love Bug, Joseph Lemper, and Ice Breaker Fancy. Love Bug features single cream flowers with a rose blush. Joseph Lemper has a single pure white flower which turn to a light green. Ice Breaker exhibits single cream and green blooms.

Currently the most popular hellebores are the H. orientalis and its hybrids which flower in the early spring around the period of Lent. Thus they are often referred to as the Lenten Rose.

Monrovia plants are divided into Winter Jewels and Winter Dreams series. Winter Jewels series bears irresistible names such as Ruby Wine, Red Sapphire, Sparkling Diamond, Painted and Golden Sunrise. These hybrids feature large, double cup-shaped blossoms in a variety of colors, including picote edges, contrast veining and splotching that looks like it was applied with a paint brush.

The Winter Dreams series features two beauties. Double Fantasy and Winter Dreams. The Winter Dreams hybrid has flowers that actually mature to a slate black.

In the dark and dreary days of late winter and early spring add some pizazz and life to a winter yard that can often look pretty bleak by choosing some hellebores to add to your year-round landscape.

8 tips to put some health in your pet's stocking

to make 2017 the best year yet for your pet.

their

• Keep pets moving. Glucosamine supports healthy mobility as your dog ages. Interestingly, cats do not seem to have joint issues associated with aging. Lucky them! Glucosamine can come in many forms, from supplement tablets and treats to convenient Ficox Chews, available over the counter from your veterinarian.

• Keep up appearances. Omega Fatty Acid supplements, such as that found in fish oil, not only helps joints but also improves and maintains the appearance of coat, skin and nails. Pets like to look good, too!

• Provide a Vitamin Boost. Pet vitamins augment the vitamins and minerals contained in food, assuring a healthy intake. Vitamin supplements are especially important if you home cook your pet's food.

• Protect from the inside out. Probiotics are for pets, too. Probiotic microorganisms provide intestinal balance that not only boosts the immune system, but can also help relieve diarrhea and ease gas. Healthy functioning organs make for happy, playful pets.

• Help the hairballs. A cat's fastidious grooming produces hairballs. Not only are they unpleasant, but they can also cause intestinal blockages. There are gels, food blends and even treats that can help ease the elimination of hairballs, so the whole process is easier on your cat, and on vou.

• Maintain healthy habits. Get outside and play. Regular exercise is the best gift you can give your pet. Develop (and keep) a routine, as pets rely on a consistent schedule. No excuses! Keep teeth clean and gums healthy with rawhides and dental chews, bully sticks and chew toys. Get crunchy treats for cats, too. Unless you enjoy the prospect of trying to brush your cat's teeth.

• Schedule annual exams. Regular check-ups with blood work keep pet health and wellness on track. And if you do sense an issue, get it checked out sooner rather than later. Have you scheduled a dental cleaning and exam lately? A healthy mouth is the gateway to wellbeing.

• Holiday treats not worth the weight. Keep pets away from food scraps that quickly add pounds. And be vigilant about holiday hazards like chocolate, poinsettias and holly, ribbons, light strands and Uncle Ned who keeps slipping that sweet dog of yours one treat after another.

Wishing you and your pets a happy and healthy 2017.

Sneak more nutrition into the holidays and beyond

By Marni Bistany

As an organic private chef and caterer, food is my life. I don't take shortcuts when it comes to nutrition because there are so many easy ways to get extra nutrients into food.

Spinach is one of the most nutritious all-around sneaky food fixes there are. It should be lightly cooked to best access nutrients and reduce oxalic acid content, and when sautéed it preserves more nutrients than boiled. Super packed with vitamins A, C, K, B2, carotenoids, magnesium, folic acid and iron, spinach can be disguised as herbs and pairs well with garlic, nutmeg, thyme, parsley or basil. A couple of handfuls or cups a day is plenty. Try "batchprocessing" spinach by buying in bulk and precooking and freezing or putting in glass containers in the fridge, best used within 4 days. Check out these simple spinach ideas to get more nutrition into your everyday:

• cooked, chopped and added to whipped eggs for an easy frittata or breakfast burritos for holiday sleepover company

• cooked or raw chopped in smoothies

• cooked, chopped and added to vegetarian or meat chili, tacos, burritos and curries for those winter weekend football gatherings

• cooked, chopped and added to bread stuffing for turkey, with feta and parmesan for stuffed mushroom hors d'oeuvres, as a crostini with goat cheese, pizza topping, or simply sautéed with garlic and shredded carrots for a simple accompaniment to fish and meat

• spinach-stuffed rolled pork loins or breast of veal are wonderful for more formal holiday gatherings.

Carrots are almost as versatile as spinach. Recent research shows that carrots, part of the orange-yellow vegetable group, are most beneficial for cardiovascular health. Packed with Vitamins A, K, C, Bs, potassium, Sneaking more nutrition into your food is easy if you follow a few tricks, like adding spinach to whipped eggs or pureed carrots to mashed potatoes.

fiber, and betacarotene as antioxidants, a cup of sliced or shredded carrots a day can be snuck into just about anything. Carrots pair well with honey, coriander, dill, basil or cinnamon.

Try these ideas to enhance your food with carrots: • shred or slice and add raw to salads, slaws, wraps, sandwiches and spring rolls

• shred and add to pumpkin and bran muffins or holiday sweet breads

• add to homemade or store bought pasta sauce, lasagnas, turkey or beef meat loaf, bolognese, chili, tacos and veggie burritos, risottos

• add to spinach dip, ranch dip, guacamole, artichoke dip or replace garbanzo beans with roasted carrots for a yummier hummus

• add cooked and pureed carrots to mashed potatoes or potato pancakes or fold into a butternut squash and apple soup to add texture and depth

Parsley may seem like an afterthought, but this versatile plant adds more than just the ubiquitous garnish to the plate and it's the third food that I sneak into just about everything I cook – except for desserts!

If you're able to add a handful of parsley a day to your food, you're also getting vitamins K, C, A, iron, flavonoids (antioxidants), volatile oils (these are good for protecting against tumor formation and are anticarcinogenic therefore excellent to add to marinades when grilling).

Add raw parsley to:

• homemade juices (roll up in a kale leaf to extract the most juice) and smoothies

• homemade marinades and salad dressings with garlic and olive oil, tomato basil salad, tabouli, pestos, every hummus and dip

• holiday vegetable casseroles: green bean and mushroom, spinach, broccoli-cheese, a make-ahead cauliflower mash with nutmeg, homemade cranberry relish and chutney

• appetizers: crab cakes, crab dip, add to any soft cheese like goat or blue and stuff into cherry tomatoes or endive leaves, Swedish meatballs, tomato parmesan crostini.

Top Holiday lighting trends include color

By Tim Scott

It's that magical time of the year when you start untangling your lights and getting in a festive spirit. So, are you going to stick with putting your lights up the same way you did last year (and the year before that)? I'd like to encourage you to make your house merry and bright with this year's top trend – color.

Colored bulbs, do you remember those? Over the past several years white (well, technically clear) lights have been the go-to lighting design, but we're seeing a throwback to traditional multi-colored lights.

Run multicolored lights along your home's fascia or roof edge. Spruce up shrubs with color blocks of all red or green. Illuminate walkways and paths with colorful ground lighting.

If you're not ready to go with an all-color lighting scheme; just add a pop of color to a tree or shrub. You'll find that colored bulbs are more festive and give your home a custom look.

Another lighting option we're starting to see is lighting projectors and spotlights. This is an easy way to shine holiday cheer on your home.

Finally, give your home extra holiday character with lighted wreaths and ornamentals. Illuminated, largescale décor adds more dimension to you holiday motif. Still, I recommend keeping the overall design simple and classy.

You don't need to go full Griswold to prove that you're committed to the Christmas spirit. A tasteful design that incorporates some of this year's lighting trends will perfectly delight everyone, including Santa.

Remember to follow proper holiday lighting etiquette and take your lights down after January 1, but before January 30. Don't be those neighbors!

Tim Scott is a professional holiday light installer and oversees the Christmas Décor division of Signature Landscapes.

I. For do-it-yourselfers, here's a time-saver: Test your lights before you hang them. Seems simple, but with all of the holiday to-dos on your mind you may forget this simple, first step.

- 2. String your lights at dusk so you can keep an eye on your design and watch for gaps or any bulbs that are out.
- 3. Never put nails in your trees.

4. Get help. If you don't want to deal with holiday lighting, but still want a jolly home, enlist a professional holiday lighting company. It's kind of like having elves of your own.

Cultivate empathy with a dose of art

By Amanda Horn

Winter brings the holiday season, a time to focus on family and friends, to practice gratitude and generosity. One of best ways to pass moments with loved ones is to share an empathy-boosting experience that inspires healthy dialogue and stirs emotion. In short? Engage art.

A soul laid bare on a canvas, or wrapped in a sculpture, reveals humanity. Confronting a contemporary artwork by someone who may not subscribe to your cultural paradigm allows you to share space with the unknown, possibly the uncomfortable. On the tail of a tumultuous political year, we have a special mandate to bolster our empathy quotient. Reflecting on historical works lends insight into the human condition, the struggles and successes of those who have come before us.

The Nevada Museum of Art offers numerous opportunities for engagement and reflection. A Shared Legacy: Folk Art in America, this season's feature show, examines how nineteenth-century makers, craftspeople, and painters created fine objects that exemplified the breadth of American creative expression during a period of enormous change in the United States.

Vivid colors and textures of Still Life with Basket of Fruit by an unidentified artist (1830-1850) invite a sense of abundance and luxury.

Folk art does not attempt to emulate works made in urban centers by classically-trained artists. Rather, the genre reflects the tastes, social practices, economics, and cultural values of the rural places and people for whom it was made. Consisting of more than 60 works and on view November 19 through January 22, A Shared Legacy: Folk Art in America showcases rare and fine portraits; vivid still life and landscapes; figurative and animal sculptures; whimsical trade signs; furniture and other household objects from artists living across New England, the Midwest, the Mid-Atlantic and the South between 1800 and 1925.

Around the corner, encounter another cultural narrative in A Place in the Country: Aboriginal Australian Paintings on view through June 5, 2017. The Indigenous people of Australia are inextricably bound to their land. Although the artists in this exhibition span diverse communities across Australia, each shares a commitment and responsibility to country: the land, sea, sky, and everything contained therein. The artists paint the natural features of their country in a non-representational style that enables them to keep secret and sacred elements hidden from uninitiated viewers.

This winter, gift kindness to yourself and others by sharing an art experience.

Amanda Horn is director of communications at The Nevada Museum of Art. Located at 160 West Liberty Street, the Museum is open 10 am to 6 pm Wednesday and Friday through Sunday. Thursdays the institution stays open until 8 pm. Learn more at nevadaart.org.

Helicopter Money – Should America consider this radical economic stimulus tactic?

Provided by Hawley MacLean

Imagine cash falling from the sky into the hands of grateful consumers. Fleets of helicopters hover over cities, dispensing massive flurries of $100 bills. Everyone gets their fair share of the money. Presto, economic stimulus.

This is pure fantasy, of course, but some economists think that the Federal Reserve should consider its figurative equivalent. Picture the Fed and other components of the federal government agreeing to boost the money supply in a radical, spectacular way – either by cutting taxes across the board or handing out cash to all Americans with no strings attached.

This idea has been around for years. Noted economist Milton Friedman introduced it in an essay in 1969, coining the phrase "helicopter money." Former Fed chair Ben Bernanke is a fan of the concept, and even legendary bond fund manager Bill Gross has called for it.

"It is something that one might legitimately consider," current Fed chair Janet Yellen noted earlier this year.

Wouldn't the economy have to crumble for the Fed to propose such a program? Maybe not. Some people think the economy is ready for helicopter money right now.

Central banks, such as the Federal Reserve, only have so many tools to stimulate economic growth. They are especially challenged when GDP is subpar and interest rates are close to zero. Proponents of helicopter money see those conditions in place today and argue that this is not an option of last resort.

Has this idea ever been tried before? Yes. Argentina and Venezuela have given their citizens free money. In both cases, the gifts bred runaway inflation. That might not occur in the U.S., but consumer prices could rise as an effect of such unprecedented central bank intervention.

Recently, some central banks have gone in for quantitative easing ("QE"), also an exceptional form of monetary policy. QE is an indirect economic stimulus that basically amounts to asset swapping. The Fed authorized three rounds of QE under Ben Bernanke: buying bonds and mortgage-linked securities, and adding credit to the reserve accounts of banks in the process.

So much QE has occurred around the world since the Great Recession that its positive effects have subsided, and central banks can only cut interest rates so much. Is it time for an established-market economy to make a "helicopter drop?"

In theory, Japan is ripe for such a move. Its economy has been plagued by many years of deflation and slow or no growth; its central bank has taken interest rates into negative territory on more than one occasion. While current Bank of Japan governor Haruhiko Kuroda continues to favor "extremely accommodative" monetary policy, he has rejected helicopter money entirely, calling the idea "impossible" and illegal.

What if people don't spend their helicopter money? Then the idea fails miserably. This is the second of two possible problems that could stem from helicopter money (accelerated inflation being the first). This year, Dutch banking giant ING polled approximately 12,000 people within the European Union to see what they would do if they were just given an extra  $\notin$ 200 per month, tax-free, for a year. Only 26% of the respondents said that they would spend the majority of that cash. You could argue that Europeans and Americans have different spending habits and financial outlooks, but what if Americans were to receive helicopter money and merely built their emergency funds with it?

Money Matters 21

The helicopter money concept may never be used to boost U.S. economic growth. Regularly handing out cash, or permanently cutting taxes solely to boost the economy, seems an unlikely prospect at best, given the potential downsides.

disease, lung disease, kidney disease, sinus disease, acid reflux or psychiatric illness can also cause bad breath.

Sometimes people perceive they have bad breath, when in fact it is not noticed by others or oral-health care professionals. If your teens' bad breath is an ongoing concern, be sure to consult your dentist or physician. The duration of bad breath is dependent on its cause. Once the cause is found, it can be prevented easily. Stay on top of your teens' oral hygiene routine. They may state they are brushing and flossing regularly, however it is important to check in often on their oral hygiene habits just to make sure.

Strip away fat from your inbox

By Ryan Gearhart

One of the greatest aspects of my job is that I get to meet many people from all walks of life. Different skills, different philosophies, and different personalities. But despite this broad variety of individuals, they all share one common burden in their daily lives. This mutual oppressor is so insidious that it can consume hundreds to thousands of hours of our lives. It is most commonly known as email.

According to a survey done by Adobe Systems, the average U.S. worker spends 6.5 hours each day checking for new emails. This epidemic has spiraled so out of control it is becoming its own full-time job. To combat this email scourge I have researched several methods or tactics.

The first common strategy is to archive all emails older than 30 days. Imagine any email older than 30 days has gone 'bad.' Responding to it by this point yields little value; if it were a more important issue, additional contact would have been made through email (again) or other channels. By archiving them, you still retain the information for any purpose but strip away the fat from your inbox.

hands, we have to start working on throttling the flow that continues to pour in. This deluge can be contained in a two-fold process. Part one is to block or unsubscribe to as much irrelevant email as possible. Honestly, consider the value obtained from reading any newsletter or recurring email. It may be more efficient to delegate it this to someone else or block it altogether.

The second part is to evaluate how you respond and react to email. Consider an email to be like a boomerang; there is a high chance that when you throw one, it will come back. As such, there is a significant likelihood that many emails you send will come flying back in the form of replies. To reduce this ricochet effect use the three D's: Delete, Defer, or Delegate.

Delete is when the information of value was already communicated. Sometimes a reply is no longer necessary and wastes both your own as well as the recipient's time. Other times the email is the reply. Delete is the action for these emails.

Defer is when an email will break your current workflow. Put it on a to-do list or schedule it on your calendar. This way, you do not have to stop your current progress completely, but will also not forget about it.

Lastly, delegate. Delegating may initially seem a bit counter-intuitive, but when done right it can save hundreds of hours, so you can work on more important issues. It may involve an initial time investment of training an existing or new employee on the front end, but the payoff will almost always yield greater results. An alternative method of delegating is to invest in an automation process of some kind.

These tricks are just the tip of the iceberg, but consider them tools in your kit, so you can start to liberate yourself from email tyranny today.

Don't let money stress you out during the holidays

If you are like most people, you probably stress out at least a you probably stress out at least a little when it comes to the holidays and your money. Holidays can be difficult enough with the pressures of things to do and entertaining family and friends without the added pressure of worrying about your finances.

We believe that some people make the holidays harder than they have to be due to one major reason, lack of planning. How much money do you plan to spend on gifts this year? Who are you buying presents for? Will you be traveling during the holidays? If so, will you drive or fly? How much will that cost?

Another reason people get into financial trouble during the holiday season is because they use credit cards to finance their gifts and travel. It is easy to get caught up in the moment and buy gifts you cannot afford when all you have to do is "swipe". Come January, reality sets in. You spent money you couldn't afford to pay back immediately. For most people, this leads to emotional stress which could have been avoided if they had followed these steps when planning for the holiday season and beyond.

Step 1: Set a budget for gift giving

We recommend sitting down with a pencil and paper (the old fashioned way) to determine how much money you can afford to allocate toward gifts. You may consider reviewing your online bank account and credit card records from last year to determine how much you spent previously. Once you have your budget you should write down the name of each person you plan to give a gift to this year. We would suggest writing down what you would like to buy for each person on your list. Many people don't realize how many people they buy gifts for each year. Don't forget people such as your hairstylist, the newspaper delivery man, the garbage man and your children's teachers. Little by little, the additional gifts add up.

The next step is to assign a dollar value to each person on your list. The total amount should not exceed your overall budget. If so, make adjustments. We would recommend gift cards for acquaintances. This will allow you to lock in the value for each gift without having to worry about taxes and shipping costs. Staying within your budget, although sometimes difficult, will be well worth it.

Step 2: Create a holiday account

Christmas Clubs were accounts introduced by some banks during the Great Depression. Banks allowed customers the ability to deposit funds into a separate account specifically earmarked for Christmas purchases. These accounts usually paid a higher interest rate than a normal savings account but typically restricted withdrawals to the holiday season. These accounts are still available at some financial institutions but every year they become less available. We recommend opening a separate savings account at your current financial institution that you can make automatic monthly systematic additions. Many financial institutions wave account fees if you make such additions.

The million dollar question you may be asking is: "So where does the money come from?" Once again, budgeting is usually the answer. You should probably start saving for the holiday season in January! By doing this, you spread the expense over twelve months versus two or three. This sounds overly simplistic but you would be surprised how much you can accomplish if you give yourself enough time. This simple planning will help you avoid a financial holiday hangover.
